How did yesterday's intervals feel?

I noticed your heart rate was higher than usual for those zones.

Honestly, they felt harder than they should have. I was hitting the paces but it took way more effort.

Let's adjust your zones this week. I think you're carrying more fatigue than the data shows.

In 25 years of coaching, I've watched the pendulum swing from athlete feedback to athlete data. What once felt like a handful of data points has turned into hundreds. The truth sits somewhere between what the athlete feels and what the data shows. augo helps me get there faster. It surfaces patterns and connections, and my coaching perspective helps turn them into better decisions. That's the future of coaching.

Markus Lombardini
Triathlon Coach & Founder of MyTrainair

I tested everything, from full AI-driven programming to the lightest-touch tools out there. It wasn't until I found augo that I knew I'd found the right fit: it kept the coach-athlete relationship front and centre. Having it all pulled together clearly means I spend my time on what actually matters — the relationship, the communication, the education. That's real coaching. augo just lets me do more of it.

/////// ABOUT AUGO

augo was founded by Fabi and Bruna, two endurance coaches who also happened to work in tech. As a business analyst and data scientist, they expected their tools to help them coach better.

Instead, they found themselves drowning in fragmented communication, losing important details, and missing the signals that mattered.

So they built augo. Because coaching is hard enough without tools that create more work. We believe AI should support human expertise with the right insights at the right time, helping you do what you do best: understand and develop your athletes.

In late 2025, Andreas Hermann, a computer scientist and triathlete joined augo as a co-founder. He not only brings in experience as a CTO in a sportstech company but also worked on the same problem as augo did before the three founder met.

They decided to join forces and Andreas joined augo's mission.
